University of Pittsburgh Reading Center’s

Spring Tutoring Program

PROGRAM
Our reading tutoring programs are offered during the spring semester. The program is on Saturday mornings from mid-January through late April.

TUTORS
Tutors for the program are graduate students in the Reading Specialist and/or Master’s in Reading Education programs who are enrolled in the course “Applied Principles of Remediation” at the University of Pittsburgh. One-to-one or small group tutoring is offered based on the number of graduate students who have enrolled in the course during any given semester.

INSTRUCTION
The graduate students use research-based strategies to address all areas of reading development, including phonological awareness, phonics, vocabulary, comprehension, fluency, spelling, and writing. Graduate students also provide a complete diagnostic report to each student’s family at the end of the tutoring session.

ACCEPTANCE FOR ENROLLMENT
Children enrolled in kindergarten – 12th grade will be considered for acceptance into a tutoring program. The Reading Center is committed to providing services to struggling readers. It is also the goal of the Reading Program at the University of Pittsburgh to provide its graduate students with the opportunity to work with struggling readers. Therefore, in order to be considered for the program, students must demonstrate a delay in one or more areas of reading development. The first two scheduled days of each tutoring session will be used for diagnostic testing, in which each student will be evaluated in most areas of reading development to determine eligibility for the program.
